Attempt to Blow up a Steamship. At 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon the steamship Guyandotte, of the Old Dominion line, sailed from her pier in New York for Norfolk, Va. As the last bell was ringing previous to the departure of the vessel, Robert Sinclair, the mess boy, noticed a young man about 25 years of age coming hurriedly from the closet room. The boy's attention was fixed and he noted that the stranger had a brown mustache and whiskers, and that he wore a Derby hat, light brown over-coat, and dark trousers. These observations were made while the stranger burried ashore were made while the stranger burried ashore and disappeared among a knot of persons at the foot of the gang plank. The steamer, Capt. D. Kelly in command, proceeded on her voyage. When off Long Branch an explosion occurred in the after part of the saloon, by which Capt. Kelly and James Justine were slightly injured. The explosion is believed to have been from dynamite packed in a satchel that had been left packed in a satchel that had been left in the closet room. Sinclair told the captain of the stranger who had burried ashore as the last bell was ringing before the steamer sailed, and naturally he is regarded as having placed the satchel containing the explosive. The explosion was heard in every part of the vessel and the detonation caused much excitement and the detonation caused much excitement among crew and passengers. Capt. Kelly at once signalled to the engine room to stop and an investigation was at once begun. It was discovered that a hole about fifteen feet square had been caused by the explosion through the main and hurricane decks, and much damage had been done in the saloon and to the outside joiner work on the main deck. The cabin was filled with splinters of timber, a piece of which struck a passenger named D. A. Kelley, who was splinters of timber, a piece of which struck a passenger named D. A. Kelley, who was reading in the saloon about sixty feet from the closets where the explosive is believed to have been placed. The machinery of the vessel was found uninjured, but the captain deemed his vessel in no condition to continue the voyage, and he put back, returning to New York at 10:15. The belief on board is that the stranger left his satchel, containing dynamite or some other powercontaining dynamite or some other powerful explosive, in the closets, which are blown to atoms and which locate the centre of the explosion.
